APPLICATION BY A BARRISTER FOR A PRACTISING CERTIFICATE

If you are a Barrister making an application for a New South Wales Practising Certificate as a Solicitor and Barrister, you are required to provide the following documentation with your completed application form and fees:

- a completed Declaration of Good Standing Form (see overleaf);
- a Certificate of Fitness from the Bar Association dated within the previous 28 days. (Please note if you are the holder of a current Barrister's practising certificate, you must surrender that certificate to the Bar Association);
- details of admission in any other jurisdiction by submitting a Certificate of Fitness and Good Standing dated within the previous 28 days from the body issuing practising certificates in each of the jurisdictions; and
- a brief resume of legal practice/work experience undertaken since your admission.

Please note that your application will be considered by the Licensing Committee of the Law Society to determine the conditions to be imposed on your practising certificate.

The standard conditions of 2 years supervised legal practice and a requirement to undertake a practice management course are generally imposed on your practising certificate. The practising certificate will allow you to work as an employee only.

If you are intending to practise as a sole practitioner, unsupervised partner, legal practitioner director or solicitor on the record for a corporation, government department/instrumentality, you will require an unrestricted practising certificate. You will need to make an application to the Licensing Committee and the Committee will consider the application based on your experience & qualifications. Please advise in a covering letter if this situation applies to you.

If you have less than three years experience as a legal practitioner and you have not completed the College of Law, the standard conditions of 2 years of supervised legal practice, the practice management course and a further condition of completing additional training courses, such as the institutional phase of the Professional Program of the College of Law are generally imposed on your practising certificate.

Meetings of the Licensing Committee are held monthly. Please allow a delay of approximately 4 - 5 weeks.
