

Brett Feltham

Partner, Gadens

Brett is a Partner in the Employment Advisory team of Gadens, a leading independent law firm. Brett has over 23 years' experience, and is a Law Society of New South Wales Accredited Specialist in employment and industrial relations law. Brett is Co-Chair of the Law Society's Employment Law committee and a member of the relevant accreditation committee.

Brett provides assistance to clients in relation to employment, workplace relations, discrimination and workplace health and safety issues, from both an advisory and contentious perspective. This includes assisting clients on all facets of the employment life cycle from pre-employment, performance, and conduct issues, terminating the employment relationship, through to postemployment issues. Brett has considerable experience and expertise in relation to cross-border employment arrangements and has assisted many clients to expand both into and out of Australia. He is also an expert on all legal aspects of executive remuneration and employee equity and cash incentive arrangements.

Brett is regularly asked to deliver seminars and webinars to industry bodies about developments in workplace laws, and frequently holds briefings for clients on topical workplace relations, including of late issues arising from COVID-19, JobKeeper, and vaccinations. He regularly contributes to publications updating clients on workplace law developments and as a thought leader on emerging issues.
